During the evenings, I would often sit on a bike outside to stay aware of my surroundings. In my neighborhood, there was a gang known as the Dilip gang, and my neighbor Siva Anna would engage in conversations with them. At that time, I was incredibly innocent. I would always keep my head bowed and avoid direct eye contact, especially with guys in my neighborhood.

As a young adult, I was quite modest and reserved. However, whenever the group of people from the gang would arrive, I would be left outside and excluded.That side of me, the modest and reserved demeanor, would never be seen in their presence. But when they were not around, I felt free to observe and engage with everything around me. It was a stark contrast to the innocent and modest behavior I displayed in their presence.
